© 2025 Groups.io

Brent Poirier Attorney at Law 7/17/06 #12058

The strange article is located on the website of the Hindustan Times, a major newspaper for that region of India extending from Mumbai to Delhi, and Central India.

If you go to www.epaper.hindustantimes.com and set up an account, i.e. register (it's free) and then log in, look carefully for the "search" option near the top of the page. Plug in the word "embezzling". Then two small calendars pop up, asking for the date range. Today being July 17 it offers the range 17/7/2006 in the first and second boxes. When you click on the first box it gives you the option, without going into their archives, to go back to 11/7/2006 that is the 11th of July. Select that option. Then it provides a link to the article in question. So in fact this odd article without a word of truth in it, somehow made it into the online edition of the paper, on page 6 of the Metro Section of the July 14th issue. I of course have no way of knowing if it also made it into the print edition of the paper.

Brent

Dianne Mahboubi 7/17/06 #12065

Ask your NSA

Show quoted text

Douglas McAdam 7/17/06 #12063

Hi Brent-
Makes me wonder if all our own media industry publishes truth. Having worked many years ago in the newspaper, radio and tv industry I can say that at that time they were very much biased by vested interests.
Can anything be done about correcting this false news?

regards,
doug

Show quoted text

Albert 7/17/06 #12069

Douglas McAdam wrote:

> Hi Brent-
> Makes me wonder if all our own media industry publishes truth. Having worked many years ago in the newspaper, radio and tv industry I can say that at that time they were very much biased by vested interests.
> Can anything be done about correcting this false news?
>
> regards,
> doug

Since there is no standard, I correct myself, since the standard is self created it can and does mean everything. But that is only part of the answer. There are those who keep secrets and there are those who dispatch false information. Who does what is not known.

Albert V

> On Jul 17, 2006, at 4:13 AM, Brent Poirier Attorney at Law wrote:
>
> > The strange article is located on the website of the Hindustan Times, a major newspaper for that region of India extending from Mumbai to Delhi, and Central India.
> >
> > If you go to www.epaper.hindustantimes.com and set up an account, i.e. register (it's free) and then log in, look carefully for the "search" option near the top of the page. Plug in the word "embezzling". Then two small calendars pop up, asking for the date range. Today being July 17 it offers the range
> >
> > 17/7/2006 in the first and second boxes. When you click on the first box it gives you the option, without going into their archives, to go back to 11/7/2006 that is the 11th of July. Select that option. Then it provides a link to the article in question. So in fact this odd article without a word of truth in it, somehow made it into the online edition of the paper, on page 6 of the Metro Section of the July 14th issue. I of course have no way of knowing if it also made it into the print edition of the paper.
> >
> > Brent
>
> Yahoo! Groups Links